

LOCAL DEPARTMENT.

Turtles bite now.
Enforce the fish law.
The roasting ear is on deck.
Doctor Leech has a nice office.
Court has adjourned for the present.
Silence is not always a sign of wisdom.
July will be hot enough to make up for the cool June.
Yard wide Pacific Lawns 8 1/2 cents, at Craik's.

The M. E. Church and parsonage look bright and cheerful.
Over 1,000 have signed the Murphy pledge in Hamilton city.

Keep cool! Buy a Seersucker Coat and Vest at Jos. Woerner's.

Transactions in real estate are very slow now.

Last Sunday was the 110th anniversary of American Independence.

Doctor Leech's office is opposite the Reichel House.

Wheat never was much better in this country.

Col. Welby has our thanks for late western papers.

Boys' Straw Hats 25c., worth 50c. and 75c., at Jos. Woerner's.

The rattle of the reaper has been heard all around us the past week.

Shelby county furnishes sixty saloons, paying an aggregate tax of $11,700.

W. D. Freeman's Cologne and Face Powders at Craik's, sole agent.

Wellsville, Ohio, closes her saloons under the Dow law.

Lima has three saloons less since the Dow law passed.

Manilla Hats $1.70, worth $2.00 to $2.50, at Jos. Woerner's.

Commence to think of something to take to the county fair this fall.

Ada people propose to close all the saloons in that town under the Dow law.

Leach & Co. have some very cheap goods.

The agricultural implement man can now take a rest.

Grant Lowellen, of the U. L. Telegraph Co., spent Sunday in Hamilton.

Fancy Dress Shirts, two collars, 60c. and 75c., at Jos. Woerner's.

James Haston, of Sterling, Kansas, is here visiting friends. He is pleased with his new home.

If you don't want to be branded as a "bummer," be careful on what side you are a witness in court.

Very good and cheap machine oil at Leach & Co's.

The Fourth of July was not much observed in Eaton. It came in and went out unheeded.

The front steps leading into our court house are being readjusted. Fix them right this time.

Delicate shade in Lace Bunting, half regular prices, at Craik's.

We have had a week of splendid harvest weather and farmers took advantage of it.

The band festival last Saturday night in the public park was a success. Cash, $40.20.

Linen Hats 10c., same as sold elsewhere for 35c., at Jos. Woerner's.

If the "bummer element" should have any legal business to do it ought to have no hesitancy where to find counsel.

Fancy Socks 25c. worth 40c., at Jos. Woerner's.

Excursions, pic-nics and reunions are all the go now, and it is a good way to put in these quiet, warm summer days.

A full purse is a very poor substitute for an empty head, but it passes with the average yahoo.

Soda-water a specialty at Dr. Leech's soda fountain, opp. Reichel House.

And now the county fairs are advertising the time and place of their "shows" and offer big inducements.

Crime seems to be rampant. The papers are filled with horrible things that make one shudder to read them.

Parasols worth $1.75 now $1.15, at Craik's Big Red Store.

Judging from the frequent notes of the quail heard throughout the county, this game bird will be plentiful next fall.

The game of ball on Saturday between the Williamsburg and Pattonas resulted in a score of 4 to 2 in favor of Pattonas.

Boys' Overalls 25c., worth 50c., at Jos. Woerner's.

Life is short—only four letters in it.—Three-quarters of it is a "lie," and half of it is "fil."

Always trade with those business men who advertise. You will always find them reliable, courteous and anxious to please you.

"Red is the prevailing color in Eaton," since Craik opened his great cheap Dry Goods Store, corner Main and Maple Sts.

A number of towns in Ohio have taken advantage of the prohibition clause of the Dwy law and have prohibited the traffic in their corporation limits.

Bring in your Pictures and have them framed. Price and workmanship guaranteed. Also, have your broken mirrors refitted at Eubanks' Book Store.

Lost—A light blue fan, on the Camden pike, between Shideler's crossing and Camden. Finder will please leave at this office.

It is reported that the Deuber watch case firm has settled to go to either Canton or Sidney. We'll bet a big apple it will be a long time until the new works go anywhere.

40c. is our price for a very superior quality Gentlemen's Gaze Under-shirt, well worth 75c., at Jos. Woerner's.

After the Eaton gas and oil well reached a depth of about 1600 feet, the company agreed to abandon it for the present. The sinking of a new well will be commenced in a very short time.

According to a State law passed April 9, 1886, teachers in the common schools of Ohio can dismiss their schools without forfeiture of pay on the 1st of January, the 22d of February, Christmas and Thanksgiving Day.

Go down east to Craik's Big Red Store at the corner if you want genuine bargains.

The strawberry is neither a berry nor a fruit. Scientific investigators say that it is a sort of vegetable accident. It is the same thing as the "core" of the raspberry, except that it is good for something. It was a happy accident that created such a good core.

The people will accept the cash moneys of the saloons under the Dow law, and tolerate the saloons in consideration of the profits! They don't like intemperance any less, but they like hard cash more. That's the sort of people the people are.

Schools and Miscellaneous Books will be sold at wholesale prices at the Book Store of W. A. Eidson during the Normal School and Teachers' Institute.

There is altogether too much encouragement given to scandal peddlers at the present time. The most absurd stories are circulated, and too often regarded as truth by those who ought to have better judgment. It is, sometimes, disastrous to be too inquisitive about the private affairs of others.

25c. boys' choice of all boys' and children's Straw Hats, worth 50c. to 75c., at Jos. Woerner's.

Some reckless scoundrel broke the handle off the public pump in front of the Stephens' block, on Thursday night last. It is time that the overturning of boxes at midnight and the destruction of public property should be stopped. There is too much of it. What was the salary of our Marshal raised for?

Decided bargains in Gentlemen's Summer Underwear. Come and see them, at Jos. Woerner's.

Webster defines a "bummer" as a "houseless vagrant," a "forager," but we have a "gint flunk" sucking attorney in Eaton, who characterizes him as a person that refuses to perform himself to suit his side in a law suit. Old Noah will please revise his mistake, while respectable citizens will get ready to refuse to go before courts as witnesses.

Young men, see the nobby light colored Stiff Hats for $1.75, worth $2.50, at Jos. Woerner's.

Grant Fields (colored) was tried before Mayor Marsh on Monday last on two charges, one for drunk and one for disorderly conduct. He pleaded guilty to both, and for the drunk he was fined $5.00 and costs; for the disorderly conduct, to be worked out on the chain gang at the rate of $1.00 per day, which will give him employment for the summer.

LADIES, ATTENTION! Craik, at Kline's big red corner, is selling cheaper than any Cincinnati house.

Esq. Hubbard and wife, C. F. Brooke, Jr., James Clemmons, of N. Y. city; Dr. Schurtz, Henry Ressler, Wm. Bonner, Miss Della Brooke, Miss Laura Bruce, Miss Lou Achey, Misses Della and Kittie Thompson, Miss Carrie Van Doren and lady friend from Springfield, O., Misses Edith and Mary Gould, and ye editor of the Democrat and wife, are camping on Twin this week near Lexington, on the grounds of friend J. H. Markey. A learned "attorney calls these annual gatherings" "big drunks."

Boys' Knee Pants for less than cost of making—50 pairs, take your choice for 25c., at Jos. Woerner's.

A southern Ohio editor ventures to remark that printing offices are not run for the fun of the thing. They are business enterprises, pure and simple. It costs time and money to use type. It is just as logical to ask a newspaper man to donate a certain amount of cash to a private enterprise as to give the two of his type without even an acknowledgment. There is a great deal of sponging in this world, and the printers are constantly invited to make themselves subject to this process.

The largest stock and greatest variety of Window Shades ever kept in the county. The best fixtures and latest styles, and prices warranted against all competition, at Eubanks' Book Store.

J. N. Robinson, Esq., Traveling Passenger Agent of the Wisconsin Central line, was in Eaton last week. The Wisconsin Central is one of the best railways in the west, and governed by the best corps of officers to be found anywhere in the business. Its line will be completed from Chicago to Ashland by the 12th of this month, which city is a grand summer resort with one of the finest hotels ("Chequamegon") in the country. "Hay fever" subjects would do well to remember this fact and try it for one season.—The surrounding country is delightful, attractive and healthy. The completion of the Wisconsin Central line to Ashland, is a grand affair for the deer hunters in this section of country, and will be apt to catch the entire crowd.

See the bargains in All Wool Pants—$1.99, $2.19, $2.29, $2.39, $2.49 and $2.59, at Jos. Woerner's, The People's Clothier.

Shyster Attorneys.
The better class of attorneys, those who have a pride and respect for the profession, despise to get down to the level of the "fish-woman" and abuse men whom against their own feelings are forced into courts as witnesses. It is only the low skin, "shysters" that do it—men who earn their living by prying into the personal affairs of dead men, and women who have been unfortunate—and thus disgrace the legal profession by going forward in pursuit of business than the decency of law ever intended. The practice of law is one that is supposed to be elevating to the mind and conducive to the culture of good qualities, but the vile, indecent, and frequently vulgar abuse, heaped upon witnesses in many cases tried in our court, by these "shysters" and robbers of dead men's estates, have made them resemble more a political war gaging than a place where honest men go for justice. A stranger dropping in would conclude that the plaintiff and defendant in almost any case on trial are murderers—the witnesses the "bummer" element, indifferent to the crime of perjury—the attorneys "gutter snipes," or penitentiary convicts—and the Judge on the Bench a stump, careless of everything connected with his high and honorable position, except the drawing of his salary!

We need a Judge Johnson on every Bench, who will peremptorily silence the attorney in court that abuses and abuses witnesses, dragged against their desire into the witness chair, to testify and give evidence as to what they honestly and conscientiously know and believe to be the truth and the whole truth. And who would blame the witness abused in an open court, by a vulgar and uncouth beast, like the creature that degraded the profession and outraged the honor of the court last week in Eaton, if he would step up and knock him over with the first weapon within his reach? Persons rarely seek to be witnesses on trials in courts, and when the "ipse dixit" of the "powers that be" demand their presence, they are entitled to decent treatment and protection from foul-mouthed vilification and slander, and if it is not given them by the Court, they ought to take it upon themselves to get it by that power which the Almighty has put in possession of every man that has a common respect for his honor and good name.

Just think of it! 25c. for a pair of Boys' Knee Pants, at Jos. Woerner's.

On Saturday night last about 9 1/2 o'clock, while Mayor Marsh was standing on the corner of Main and Barron streets, William Evans and Grant Fields, two colored inhabitants of Eaton, got into a difficulty. The Mayor interfered and ordered them away, when Evans whipped out a razor and slashed at the Mayor, cutting through the back of his coat and vest, inflicting a wound about an inch in length, near the center of his back. Evans immediately fled toward the north part of town in the direction of the depot, near where he was captured by the Marshal and put into the station house. There was a strong feeling to lynch the black desperado, and we don't know but that it would have been the best thing to do under the circumstances. Dr. Michael dressed the wound of the Mayor, and although not dangerous, he made a very narrow escape. Evans had a hearing before Esq. Foster, charged with cutting to kill. Committed on default of $3,000 bond. He has served three years in the Jeffersonville, Ind., penitentiary for horse stealing.

Moleskin Pants 90c. and $1. Same as sold elsewhere for $1.00 to $1.25, at Jos. Woerner's.

Court of Common Pleas.
At the date of our last report the case of Harriet E. Tuttle vs. Robert Appleby was in progress. The case was submitted to the jury Wednesday afternoon, and a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $500 was returned on Thursday morning. The following entries have gone upon the journal during the week:
Simone Snavely vs. Christian Snavely. The plaintiff was ruled to secure costs. Bond given.
Charles P. Thum vs. John W. Harris. Sale confirmed and deed distributed overed.
Ella Hartin vs. James Hartin. Divorce granted. The plaintiff restored to her maiden name, Ella Rogers. Judgment against defendant for costs.
John W. Hevel vs. John Bope. Decree quieting title.
Rhoda Cotterman vs. Frank Cotterman. Temporary alimony allowed plaintiff—$100; $50 in ten days and $50 in thirty days.
Motions for new trials in several cases were submitted and taken under advisement by the court.
Court adjourned Thursday indefinitely. Judge Hume to notify Clerk when court will again convene.

Sweet, Orr & Co. Overalls 75c., sold elsewhere for $1, at Jos. Woerner's.

A Woman's Game.
The Ottawa Sentinel says: "A woman is going around the country who is evidently working a skin game. She calls on 'the lady of the house' and tells her all about a wonderful fact location of which she is the manufacturer. Then she tells the intended victim that she has just undertaken the sale of the article and needs testimonials, and says in an insinuating way, that she would like to have the lady use it and make personal acquaintance with its merits. If the customer likes it and is willing to give the desired testimonial, the gifted-tongued manufacturer will be willing to pay as high as $5 for it. This is supposed to go on the mind of 'the lady of the house,' who is generally unsuspecting, that she will eagerly inquire the price of the article, and she will only sign a little order for a bottle, agreeing to pay whatever it does cost. The peddler will then charge her anything more than what is actually required to pay for the articles consumed. If the innocent lady nibbles out some book and this is shored at her with an urgent request to sign. If she does sign that order—well, the delivery of the beauty culture is not yet begun, but when it does there is every reason to believe that there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, and if any husbands find their wives short in their accounts they can lay it all to the face wash peddler. This smacks largely of the Bohemian out scheme."

25c. will buy choice of our Boys' Straw Hats in great variety of styles, which we have been selling all season for 50c. to 75c., at Jos. Woerner's.

The Phenological Journal and Science of Health for July has for its "leader" a biographical and phenological sketch of Prof. J. B. Richards, M. A. The portrait is of unusual excellence and the character sketch must rank as one of the best of Prof. Sizer's instructive contributions to the general reading of mankind. The sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has let fall?" It is a fact that "Familiar Talks about Phenology for Young People" grow in interest, and the sketch is at once a study of causes and their effects; a eulogy on the greatest of greatness, practical humanitarianism; a tribute of affection to a dearly beloved friend and co-worker. It is especially interesting to thoughtful parents and progressive teachers. The reader's sympathies are at once enlisted with the work to which Prof. Richards was so fully wedded, and in which he attained such remarkable success. Who is worthy to wear "the royal mantle which he has